Volume 2
Dear Readers, Friends to Come,

We thank you for your letters and questions, and for your interests to translate, interpret, and develop further in different modes what the Society has so far touched on. Clearly, in such a short and intense period of upheaval our analyses and words will not suffice to encompass what many of the 'communities'-however terrible, terrified, unjust, unequal, racist, misogynistic, classist, closed—which we have been brought up in—experience collectively. Clearly, the vulnerabilities and exposures are not the same nor the immediate effects of state imposed 'lockdowns', a word which we will have to return to at a later time. But from the Society's perspective, we should not be fooled into thinking the States have had much choice in the matter. We give them too much agency here, if we go too far in this line of thought. They and the Capital which they serve have been caught with their pants down, but the pair of them have never seen a crisis or emergency which they did not use as a lifeline, as enhancement of their means of discipline (fiscal or penal) surveillance, control, their legitimacy (even in this time when their power?over is apparent in its illegitimacies, negligence, depravity, in-difference). We have been numbers to them for a long time. Care has meant Security, Fear our Submission to them. Our Society formed out of an exigency to struggle at the level of thought and imaginary, as this is the site of colonization and precisely where the early incisions and lacerations took place separating most of us from our bodies and from earth itself. And their capacities for thinking, knowing.

Call it friend, enemy, by-product of Capitalist Colonial Plantationist Extractivist Patriarchal Operations, call it living or dead, call it a protein, the virus is indifferent. Whatever you do, however, do not rob it of its agency to communicate to us, do not deny its communicabilities. Try to listen hear it, whatever it is, it is not what the noise around it tries to drown out by those who continue to work or make a work of it. We can sometimes know a thing by its effects, affections. This stoppage, this stand-still is real, are we immune to it, or can we be affected by it, can we create another new/old politics with it, with one another, us and the virus.
Dear Virus, (re: your silence our deafness)

It would seem a queer gesture to address or consider writing to you as the structures and infrastructures of support and health crumble and reveal their ... reveal what? Inadequacy, years, decades, centuries? of neglect, disinvestment, monopolization, determin- ation, economization, by states and by capital. And they, who still have faith in these monopoles of power/over, would like to have us believe that you are the cause. They ascribe to you names, the silent enemy, the invisible enemy, rapidly advancing, preying on the elderly, the most vulnerable, yet also indiscriminate, uniting us all against the same ... the enemy within, a common enemy, all of this, we touched on in our first letter to you, so why write again in the midst of constantly passing sirens, each of which serves as a deadly deathly reminder of the consequences of, life and death consequences of how we interpret, feel, perceive, understand the cry of those passing sirens, the alarms of those passing sirens, are they 'falling on deaf ears' too fearful that we could succumb or fall in the grip, the hands invisible hands your hands do you have hands, ears, eyes, do you feel our fears, our ears what do they hear. Someone within the society disturbed by the word 'deaf', borrowed above from this saying used in the english language, thought it important to call attention to the dis-abilities embedded in our language and the disabling tendencies metaphors they perpetuate, what they obfuscate, occlude, hide, what does it mean to hear, what is this sense, what use is when we have been taught only one sense of hearing, alert, stop, a siren, but what is it to hear yet alone listen to one's own heart to hear yet alone listen to one's own pain anguish imprisonment yet alone that of an other, others, other beings, are they beings, are they living, are you living, are you you life or death which knocks at the door (did we order something?)(what did we order?) (whose orders are we following?). We as the Society would like to state first and foremost: An Ear Full of Fear How we hear yet alone heed your call (of alarm or attention or attending-to) Cannot Hear which is also silent, silence the very condition of possibility for any form feeling sense of hearing, silence which the Society does not believe is the lack of or deprivation of sound noise but the only chance for it (thus any form of hearing) and yet for something more than sound, organized noise, so busy have been the cults or cultures most of us have been part of, always seeing hearing silence as absence, filling it with organized, 'refined' or 'unrefined' forms assemblings of sounds, music, instruments, machines, always louder, always more omni-present, more enclosed, cancelling, isolating, quarantining ourselves from the rumblings of our stomachs, guts, the deliriums and maladies of our bodies and others of earth and the winds thunders tempests hurricanes vibrations jolts like a strike of lightening, once in a lifetime, will we be able to hear yet alone heed your call, to extend proliferate intensify your call to strike and start what will be a rather long but joyful process of convalescence, of learning to hear again fully all that we were, so many of us, were inculcated to cancel out, restricting our field of hearing to certain limited frequencies, channeled, to judge, value, like, desire even this emaciated and undernourished figure of the ear and the sounds attuned to the patriarch, the 'man' of the house, the loud ones, the sure ones, the ordering ones, the bosses, the leaders, their stories, their histories ... well, at least those of us in this Society are unable to stand their calls to get back to order, their calls for public and common good which come only when their deprived indifference of decades if not centuries (of the powers they have inherited and the violence which has underwritten their authority) is exposed for all to see, read, feel, yes, hear. They appeal to a common at the same time as they have presided over centuries of thefts, seizures, privation and privatization, domestication, enslavement, deterioration, toxification and 'management' of all that is common. They appeal to a 'common' emptied extracted negated of its abundance after their 'works' have been and now filled with the waste, the ruins the dead, the garbage, the 'unproductive', the costs externalized, the poverties they fabricate, here at THE heart of the exposures and vulnerabilities they have produced in their endless zeal for production, ecco, a purely negative affirmation affirmative negation negative common/s.

And it is in these negligent and cruel acts of extracting and running earth and human existence to its 'last leg' brought down upon its one knee, their appeals to a common, in their crumbling edifices of power, tarnished of their glory, failing to control the angle of ascent of the curve, afraid to show that they could be startled, surprised, after so many measures and techniques invented to pre-empt the emergence of anything, especially their order and ordering of the world, their divine and providential management of all things and relations, their economy, their God, Capital, money, property, commodity, value, their values, starkly revealed, made evident (since they so love evidence, they so love evidence, they convinced us all, the only truth could be found in books and knowledge in laws and codes in orders and obedience, our love and duty to obey, first the king, then the queen, and now their abstract laws of endless accumulation and concentration of waste, wasted life, lives, a wasteland of earth, with their wealthy and healthy bunkers for the chosen, immune, and the derelict prisons and foresaken exposed unable neglected forsaken guards and guardians of a vision of a common as calamity, apocalypse, of their self-made, diy deserts.

And it is in their calls for order, compassion, and a hollowed out common (depraved/deprived) that they seek to mobilize sentiment, those self-appointed 'leaders', blaming their 'political' adversaries with whom they dance to determine which way the ship should crash, and which way to get it running again, this they call 'politics', this they call 'economics', for them indistinguishable. And with these calls, and their fingers pointing, they obfuscate the violence of their order and their sickly means of compassion and care.

£20,000, no £30,000, now £40,000 is the cost, supply and demand madame. Busily, noisily convening us to their streams of capture, channeled entertainment, emotional life support systems which only to drown out the silence from which your call emanates or asks each of us to hear otherwise.
Dear Virus, we understand that your silence is not... as absence, as passivity, and evidently not lacking... in effects and affects. We feel it... it is, as a possibility for listening to things we never hear, or try to hear, or teach to hear, or learn to hear, to calls not our own, languages not taught to us, sounds noises which could not be perceived or fit within our restricted senses of language, murmurs, stammers, babbles, speeches, speechless calls sirens which are not from beyond or other worldly, but come directly from earth and from our own troubling relations to the earthly, which so many of the communities we come from tried and try still to disavow, overcome, dismiss, negate as a scourge, as they do to you today, denying your force power mystifying (in aerosol form) in order force and enforce, preserve their own... (power)

From a people called Druze, came a family named Al-Atrash who gave birth to two of the great singers of the last century, Asmahan and her brother Farid, whose voices like sirens still continue to move and stir, affect, Al-Atrash in the Arabic language means the Deaf. This is the paradox of our world, which we inherit and our riddle to solve, those who have been called deaf, blind, without speech, mad, sick, dirty, untouchable, low, savage, inhuman, not human, lacking always some thing, some ability, some quality, abnormal and for this denied agency and voice, it is 'they' (who many of those in the Society comprise) (even if in order to 'assimilate' we had to forget)... 'they' who have made us feel, see, hear things we were not able to perceive before, heal us from the thinking that rendered us blind to our own blindness, deaf to our own deafness, mute to our own muteness, in the face of what is 'invisible' 'silent' and troubles our speech, language, our names, images (of the world) our metaphors, our thoughts, our lives (with one another, we include you here, dear virus), that is, our politics. In the relatively short time of the human project, contrary to those fixated on power like to tell it, new politics and ways of living life together emerge whenever the walls and borders which determine govern order our perceptions are altered. From the Society's perspective this may not be a political 'project' (like the 'human' one) in the old sense, as a 'work', it may have more to do with... the unworking worklessness that is immanent in any strike, and what ultimately threatens the politics that remain, the zombie politics, the necro-politics wedded and indiscernible from economy, understood as "" (we will leave this for a subsequent letter).

Needless to say, it requires a lot of work and a great deal of violence and coerced involuntary forced exploited labor, work or die, is the simple equation they came up with after all these years (from the time they started counting) (those who fell in love with counting and keeping count, accounts, etc...) (even more sadly, it is sometimes true, the funniest things make you cry, today in your presence) which in its newest inflection becomes, die to work!

We will not burden you now with the unspeakable legacies whither in camps or factories or plantations (today they invent more innocuous names for them like 'free trade zones') this make-work-ethic produced and continues to produce today, you wouldn't be here otherwise, but let us assure you that it is not new jobs or work, however 'green'; we in the Society seek in your wake, nor an 'economic recovery' but a recovering of our means to exist and subsist without The Economy, without coerced forced work, without being in their great 'project' of apocalypse, without The State, The Law, The Father, The Origin, The Commandment, The Hierarchy of their orders and our dutiful observance of the Codes of Conduct they gave us as 'Nature', 'natural', 'Secular', 'secular-ized' sacred orders, laws, origin of any hierarchy.

The names they will ascribe and the identities they will give to us in the Society is unimportant, since every-name-will-fall-short-of-what-it-tries-to-name, every naming betrays what it names, maybe our fondness for you is that for once in our life, we have not been called a name (or worse yet-to work) but called to attend to the details of our co-existence and pay attention to our form of life.

Postscript:
The Economization of the hospital is but one facet of a broader phenomenon which cannot fully be grasped without confronting it as a religious phenomenon, thus also moral as it regards work as well credit debt guilt. For most of this young century, we have lived to see the Economy likened to humankind's Life Support, but we have lived enough to see that it is what kills life. The Economy has become immune from life, and death, whether our own or of other beings. In a curious turn of phrase, 'to make a killing' meant as making great profits, goes from metaphorical to literal. Everything is profitable, as long as sufficient time and credit is afforded to repurpose the providential machine which hurls all life toward the foresaken wasteland that had been projected upon it. The Economists today, almost entirely of the Capitalist faith) and their co-religionists, those who share the same convictions busy within their offices, ministries, cathsafellegiance duties and professions seem to have worked hard over this last century to fine tune this machine. And as any surviving religion has done, it has separated itself with its sacred tenets (private property e.g.) & codes, heresies and penitentiaries, and when needed, special edicts, measures, packages, stimuli, supplemnt credit, beliefs, in order to immune itself from the miseries it reaps from the wretched of earth. Immune from all the suffering and violence, the mean of faith dig deep until the last penny, then move on to the nxt 'opportunity'which may well be 'mitigating' the fallout from their diggings, as they do now with the virus, all the while projecting their afterworld, for what is a religion without that, their Vatican Silicon Valley, inventing technologies to mitigate everything, even the loss of reality. The virus, now, as we write, trials to test this immunity of The Economy from earthly, profane existence. This is not the last messenger nor the first birds bats pigs camels mad-cows have come. Singers, oinkers, screechers, silent, moowing, crackling, fires, hurricanes, tsunamis, earthquakes, floods, leaks, spills, ... and each time, miraculously the incorporated entities seem to resurrect and the mean of faith toil on, carrying out their Economic works. What is different this time, virus, this curious word which names both cause and effect, is also medium, means...
Begin with the 'essentials' and the common premises of life, such as air, water, earth, unwork, unmake, undo, destitute your way up from there. Earth is our life support, not the Economy.
